

Press Release

Documation get engaged; with the launch of their new Document Management & Workflow Blog!

Eastleigh, Hampshire UK, June 2010 – Documation, an award winning provider of document management and workflow solutions, today announced the launch of its new official blog. The Documation Document Management & Workflow Blog is devoted to being an information service and to act as a credible source of articles and comments on such topics as document management applications, industry news and software developments. It will feature posts written by various members of the Documation team including Sales, Marketing, Support, Development, Finance and Professional Services all of whom will strive to create unique and interesting content centred on document-centric issues.

Steve Pittaway, Documation's Commercial Manager is thrilled to be part of the developing community of online bloggers: "Blogging is a fantastic way to engage with customers, prospects and anyone else interested in document workflow and management. Documation has built up a wealth of knowledge and experience in the document management industry and blogging is one of the best ways to share our knowledge, experience and innovative ideas in an interesting and relevant way. We look forward to opening up new and significant conversations with all our blog readers."

Blog posts will cover the following topics:

- Document management industry news
- Documation news and events
- Software development news
- Applications of document management
- Case studies from existing Documation customers

The blog is now live and Documation welcome all comments: <http://www.documation.co.uk/blog>.

Documation can also be found on Twitter under the username of @Documation.
